

The Federal Communications Commission

Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

I understand you're considering a proposition to create a flat fee system for contributions to the Universal Service Fund for long distance calls. This is a very bad idea, essentially setting up ordinary citizens to subsidize business long distance calls. It is a tacitly unfair system that penalizes people who make few long distance calls.

Please drop the idea. The current system, where fees are paid as a function of the number of calls made, is already fair. Let's keep it that way.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Steven Grant
